Dr. Martin D. Cohen is a licensed clinical psychologist and consultant. He is also the Clinical Director for Deployment of the State of Florida's Disaster Behavioral Health Response Team, which prepares for, provides, and oversees the provision of psychological first aid and other interventions to individuals, groups, and communities in the event of a terrorist attack, hurricane or other disaster.

The same experience, skills and perspectives that he brings to the citizens, first responders, and visitors in the state of Florida, he brings to our client organizations. The goal being to prevent and mitigate the adverse effects of disruptive events -- whether from natural disasters, workplace violence, accidents, or more psychological issues such as loss of co-workers, lay-offs, reorganizations, or other workplace conflict or stress.

By promoting resiliency and restoring psychological well-being and daily life functioning when necessary, organizational productivity can be most effectively maintained. Crisis leadership and crisis leadership training are Dr. Cohen's specialties and he has been practicing and honing these skills since 1981.

Dr. Cohen also provides other management consulting services including:

Professional, individualized, behavioral assessments, including on-line behavioral profiles to assist in hiring and promoting decisions, especially of managers and executives; or to aid in conflict resolution and team selection decisions

Individualized Executive Coaching and Leadership Training for managers and designated others experiencing on-the-job challenges or unique circumstances

Conflict Resolution for dyads or small groups

Building High Performance Teams through a combination of didactic and experiential training
